PREFACE

This is the first of what we hope will be a Series of Contributions to Canadian Bibliography issued by the Reference Department of the Public Library of Toronto. The idea which actuates us in this work arises from the situation which faces one who wishes to know not only what was published in early times in Canada, but where these publications may be consulted. It is useful to ourselves to have a classified list of these books and pamphlets; we think that it may be of interest and value to other libraries, and to the increasingly large number of people in Canada who are becoming interested in her early history.

This list is compiled by Miss Frances Staton, the head of the Reference Department. The date of ending the list is purely arbitrary, having no connection with book production, but marking an historical event which was influential in shaping the destinies of our country.

Chief Librarian.

RARE CANADIAN VOLUMES

BIOGRAPHICAL AND HISTORICAL.

Montcalm and Wolfe's Campaign—Pontiac and the Conquest of Canada—Canada's History Told at the C.H.E. in Many Forms

"Selection of books, maps, engravings and autographs," is the title under which Mr. James Bain, jr., and Mr. Robert Jenkins, at the late Canadian Historical Exhibition, designated their magnificent collection of literary rarities and curiosities. It must be noted that autographs or other MS. matter which are written or inserted in any of the books or pamphlets which are shown, although occasionally mentioned, are not separately catalogued.

No. 1 in this collection is entitled "Montcalm and Wolfe," by Francis Parkman, and was published in Boston in 1885. This book is the property of Mr. Robert Jenkins, and may safely be described, not only as the most valuable book, but as the greatest literary treasure relating to Canadian history, in the whole exhibition. It was originally in two volumes, and is a large paper copy, but it has been extended by over 750 portraits, landscapes, plans, maps and autographs to nine octavo volumes and one folio. Many of the additions made by Mr. Jenkins to the original two volumes are of the very greatest rarity, some of them all but unique. The extension of the original two volumes has occupied Mr. Jenkins for more than two years, and the value of this special copy, as it is now, is estimated at $1,200.

"Ponteach, or the Savages of America," is No. 2. This is a volume, the authorship of which is attributed to Major Robert Rogers, and the book was published in London in 1766. Pontiac, as the Indian name is always written now, is, it should be understood, a corruption of the name with which this book was written by Major Rogers, who hailed from Ticonderoga, and he was in his pursuits somewhat of the nature of a freebooter. With the cession of Quebec by the French and the conquest of Lower Canada by Great Britain, Major Rogers was sent to Forts Toronto (Rouille), Niagara, Detroit and Michilimackinac, now always spoken of as Mackinac, to take possession for the Imperial Government. He was a man of very great energy and determination, and anything that he undertook to do was done with the most complete thoroughness. The late Mr. Armstrong, so well known as an iron founder in this city, and Lieut.-Col. Rogers, of Peterborough, are both connections of Major Robert Rogers.

"Papers and letters on Agriculture," form No. 3 in this collection. These papers and letters were in the nature of recommendations for the study of Canadian farmers, principally in the province of Quebec. They were printed by Samuel Neilson, of 93 Mountain street, Quebec, and were published in the "Ancient Capital" in 1790. The particular copy exhibited was one presented by the publisher to John Brickwood, Esq., of London, England.

"Traite de la Police," somewhat freely translated, "Police Characteristics," is a book written by Francis Joseph Cugnet, printed by William Brown, in Quebec, in 1775, and a truly excellent specimen of early Quebec typography. The book treats in a series of papers on the criminal laws as they existed in Quebec during the French regime, prior to the English conquest.

The next exhibit, No. 5, is a report of the transactions of the Midland District Committee of the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge, held at the town of Kingston, Tuesday, October 9th, 1827. Printed at the end of this report is a catalogue of books, all of a religious or semi-religious nature, which were intended to be distributed gratuitously throughout Kingston and the neighbourhood by the S. P. C. K. The late John Macaulay, and the Venerable Archdeacon George O'Kill Stuart, the latter of whom was the first rector of York, were, the former especially, very active members of this society.

The "Journal of a Two Months' Tour" is a book relating the experiences of Charles Beatty, A.M., presumably a clergyman, the contents of which recount the writer's experiences when on a missionary tour among the frontier inhabitants of the State of Pennsylvania. It was published in 1768, and contains a very large number of interesting sketches and reminiscences relating to the manners and customs of the frontier settlers of that date.

The late Bishop Strachan, during his long lifetime, published a great number of sermons, pamphlets and reports. No. 7 consists of almost his first literary effort. It is a pamphlet entitled, "The Christian religion, recommended in a letter to his pupils." Dr. Strachan was, at the time of the publication of this letter, Anglican Minister of Cornwall in Upper Canada, and also headmaster of the well-known school where Chief Justice Robinson, the late Bishop Bethune, the late Judge McLean and many other afterwards well-known men, received their early education.

No. 8 is a book entitled "Hochelaga Depicta, or, the history and present state of the island and city of Montreal." This is a most instructive historical work, and from its pages much interesting light is thrown upon the history of what is now known as Montreal. The book was published in that city by William Greig, in 1839.

The next exhibit, No. 9, is now a very rare book. It is entitled, "The Emigrant," its author being Sir Francis Bond Head, Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Canada during the Rebellion. This book was published in London by John Murray, in 1846. The contents of it are most interesting. It is an exparte statement by Sir Francis, giving an account of the Rebellion in Upper Canada, and the causes which, in the writer's opinion, led to it. The period covered is from the time that Sir Francis was appointed to his office until he was recalled and superseded by the Earl of Durham. This particular copy which is exhibited is in the original boards, having upon its covers George Cruikshank's sketches. The volume in question was presented by Sir Francis to his sister, and bears his autograph inscription to that effect.

George Taylor, of Sheffield, England, accomplished a voyage to North America in the years 1768-69, and in No. 10 is found a book written by Taylor, relating his experiences in North America. In its pages the author gives an account of his manner of trading with the Indians, also a history of their manners, diversions and customs, together with incidents of his journey by land from New York to Quebec, he having accomplished this long pilgrimage via Albany, Saratoga, Fort Edward, Lake Champlain and Montreal. The book itself is of little or no literary value, and was evidently written for home readers. It was published by S. Cresswell, of Nottingham, England, for the author, in the year 1771. Taylor had been a sailor, and, in all probability, when he wrote his experiences, it was for the benefit of his friends more than for general circulation.

An early account of Nova Scotia is given in No. 11, which is an account of a voyage from Port Royal to Acadia by Monsieur Diereville, which was published in Rouen by Jean Baptiste Besonge, in 1708. The contents are interesting, as it gives us one of the very earliest accounts of the Province of Nova Scotia.

The celebrated "Boston Tea Party" and the incidents connected therewith are recalled by No. 12, which is a "Short narrative of the horrid massacre of Boston." This massacre, as it is called, occurred on the evening of March 5th, 1770, the perpetrators thereof being the soldiers of His Majesty's 79th Regiment. Everybody has heard of the tea riots in Boston, when the populace would not allow a tea ship to discharge her cargo, but threw the packages of tea into the water. Thereupon arose tumultuous proceedings, and the 79th Regiment were called out to repress the rioters. How it came about that the mob were eventually fired upon does not now matter materially, the fact remains that they were fired upon and that many of the inhabitants of the city of Boston lost their lives. It is a very sad page in history, for there can be no doubt about it that, whether the Bostonians were right or wrong, they, at any rate, thought themselves justified in the course they adopted. This book, in addition to giving a history of what took place on March 5th, also contains observations on the state of things prior to that lamentable event. The book was printed, by order of the town of Boston, in London, and subsequently reprinted by E. & C. Dilly and J. Almon.

The next exhibit, No. 13, is simply a list of subscribers, and the reasons why they should subscribe towards the relief of the sufferers by the great fire of Montreal, Canada, in 1765.

A remarkably interesting exhibit is No. 14. It is a "Correct Journal," an account of the proceedings of the New England land forces during the expedition by the American colonists against the French settlement of Cape Breton, up to the time of the surrender of Louisbourg. This account was sent by General Pepperell, who was commander-in-chief of the colonial forces, to his friend, Captain Henry Stafford, who resided at Exmouth, Devonshire, England. The book was published in Exon (Exeter) by A. and S. Brice in 1746. It is excellently written and of very great interest, and is almost the only contemporary account of the expedition against Louisbourg conducted by the Colonial troops. So highly was General Pepperell's conduct approved of by the Home Government that the honour of knighthood was conferred upon him for his services, he being one of the very few North American colonists who received that honour.

A noted criminal trial is brought to mind by No. 15. In the pamphlet under this number is related the trial of James McDermott and Grace Marks, which took place at Toronto on November 3rd and 4th, 1843, for the murder of Thomas Kinnear, a resident of Richmond Hill, and his housekeeper, Nancy Montgomery, on Sunday, July 31st, 1843. At the end of the book are portraits of the culprits, and it also contains the confessions they made after their trial. McDermott was subsequently hanged, Grace Marks was also sentenced to death, but eventually the sentence was commuted, and she went to Kingston penitentiary for life.

Our First Sunday School Paper

By FRED. WILLIAMS.

DO YOU KNOW that the first Sunday school paper in Canada was published in Toronto? The celebration last Sunday at Halifax of the sesquicentennial of the founding of the first Sunday school in Canada at St. Paul's Church, Halifax, in 1783, caused me to make a search for the Sunday school literature of the time; but there was practically no result. There may have been some parish or diocesan leaflets, but there is no trace of any organized attempt at literature until November 28, 1850, when The Church (a newspaper devoted to Church of England interests which is little known, though it must have been one of the first in America, for it began publication in 1837 and continued for some 20 years), contained the prospectus of "The Young Churchman," which was to appear under the sanction of the Bishop of Toronto (Dr. Strachan). This prospectus was signed by A. F. Pless, who was the publisher of The Church, so that it is evident that the two were conducted from the same office.

It was not until mid-January, 1851, that "The Young Churchman" was published. It was described as "a literary magazine designed chiefly for the youth of the Church of England in the province of Canada," and consisted of eight pages with two columns of type on each. Its contents were varied; there was a serial story dealing with the trials of the early settlers and how they managed to secure their church; a series of Scholar's Notes on the New Testament; some poetry, some prayers; a little intelligence about work in the mission fields; and a heart-rending story about a girl who was naughty in Sunday school and church and of her sad fate.

The second issue was of more local interest, for it contained an article concerning the Sunday school of the Church of St. George the Martyr, Toronto, which told of the festival held on January 1, when the children attended divine service and listened to an address by Dr. Lett, the incumbent, who pointed out that the requisites of a Sunday school teacher were "Patience, Perseverance and Prayer," after which Mrs. Lett and other ladies distributed "substantial bunnies" to the children.

The young paper prospered; it was soon increased in size to 16 pages, and was published monthly. The September issue contained accounts of Sunday school festivals at Port Stanley and at Goderich, at the latter of which Bishop Strachan was present and addressed the children and their teachers, with no seeming bad effect upon their digestions, for "the boys and girls sat down to the number of 120 under an extensive awning which overspread tables groaning under the weight of cakes and tarts and sweetmeats, etc., and good things." Thus it is apparent that, whatever else may have changed in the years that have gone, there has been little change in the Sunday school festival, except that now we call it a picnic, and perhaps do not have as many long speeches as the children of past generations had to listen to, for in those days no gathering was a success unless there were many speeches.

It would be interesting to know how long The Young Churchman lived. There is a file at the Toronto Public Library, a gift from Dr. Scadding in 1901, but it does not go further than 1852, and Dr. J. J. Tallman, who contributed two valuable articles on the subject to The Church Messenger, has been unable to discover when the Sunday school paper ceased publication, or whether there are any other copies in existence other than those in our Public Library. It may be that some out-of-town reader may have copies among the books handed down by their grandparents; if so, it would be interesting to hear from them.

Ben Franklin's French Printer

By FRED. WILLIAMS.

DO YOU KNOW the story of the French printer who was brought to Canada by Benjamin Franklin in the hope of suborning the allegiance of Britain's new French subjects? It is another of those romances to be found so often woven in Canadian history.

Benjamin Franklin, who had been sent to London by the leaders of the discontented in the American colonies, was walking the street near his lodging one night before retiring when he was accosted by a ragged man. The Philadelphian thought he was being held up, but all that was asked of him was opportunity for the stranger, who told Franklin that he was a French printer, who had press, type and paper but could find no jobs, and who pleaded for an opportunity in America.

Franklin, with his eyes on the Province of Quebec, saw what an asset a French printer would be, and arranged for the transport of Fleury Mesplet and his wife to Philadelphia. There the press was set to work, first with propaganda and then at the printing of money which was turned out by the sheet. This was the famous currency issued by the Continental Congress which gave rise to the expression: "Not worth a continental."

Franklin had set his mind upon the adding of the northern country to the new republic and when he and his fellow commissioners—Samuel Chase, Charles Carroll and Father John Carroll—went up to Montreal (then in American possession) he arranged for Mesplet to travel with them with his press and a supply of paper. The journey was a long one over the ancient Indian trail and up Lake Champlain to the Richelieu and so to the St. Lawrence. Unfortunately for Mesplet the boat in which he was travelling was swamped in one of the rapids and he remained behind to salvage what he could. Franklin and his companions went on to Montreal, which they reached on April 28; it was not until May 6 that the Mesplets arrived, with the press intact, but with only a remnant of the stock of paper, hardly enough to print small handbills. It became necessary to procure paper if the propaganda to seduce the French was to begin. The only stock available was a small lot of wallpaper. This Franklin tried to buy, but the merchants declined to accept the continental bills and insisted upon cash (Most of them were Scottish!) Thus Franklin's scheme was spoiled.

He had delayed his coming too late. His efforts and those of his companions to persuade the French to abandon British allegiance met only rebuffs. The fortunes of war had turned. On the very day that Mesplet arrived at Montreal Guy Carleton drove the Americans from the heights at Quebec and the rout to the boundary had begun. On May 10 the news of the defeat at Quebec reached Montreal; it was evident that the invasion had failed; the commissioners recognized that the power of the Roman Catholic Church, through Bishop Briand's insistence upon fidelity to the British connection, had frustrated their mission; and on May 11, Franklin and his colleagues left Montreal for the south.

Mesplet was left, a stranger in a strange city. He could speak the language of the majority—that was his only asset save his printing press—the American paper which he had printed so freely was no use in Montreal. He was arrested as a suspect, held in prison for a month, and then released upon his explaining the circumstances of how he had been used by Franklin and taking the oath of allegiance. Back to his starving wife and deserted press he went. He had no paper and no work. Yet his luck changed. He secured a contract from the clergy to print a hymn book, Le Cantique de Marselles. Endorsed by the clergy he had no trouble in securing the paper which he had been unable to get with his American paper money, and in a brief while he published his book, the hymns being printed from wooden blocks on the reverse of the wall paper.

The success of this enterprise led to others. Mesplet printed another book for the clergy (a copy of which is in the Toronto Public Library) and having secured a supply of paper from England, published another book, the first non-religious in Canada. In 1778 he started a newspaper, The Gazette, but within a year was in trouble with the authorities; he and his editor, Valantin Jutard, an attorney when he was sober, were arrested and thrown into jail, where they remained for over three years. When released Mesplet resumed his trade as a printer and lived until 1794. His press is, I believe, in the Chateau de Ramezay Museum at Montreal, well cared for, in contrast to the press upon which the first Upper Canada Gazette was printed at Niagara in 1793 by Louis Roy, another Frenchman. Our press is hidden away from public sight in the attic of the Normal School, instead of being on view as the great historical treasure it is.

The Montreal Gazette was not, as stated by some historians, first printed at the Chateau de Ramezay; but in a house on Rue Capitale, now vanished, not far from the waterfront. When it left Mesplet's hands it became bi-lingual, and then, in course of time, wholly English, passing through varied owners until it fell into the hands of Thomas and Richard White, who made it the power it now is in business and politics.

LIBRARY OF ST. SULPICE HAS LARGEST COLLECTION OF CANADIAN LITERATURE

The largest collection of Canadiana in Canada or elsewhere has been gathered upon the shelves of the Library of St. Sulpice, Montreal, according to the statement of A. Fauteux, the librarian.

"A copy of every book that has ever been written about Canada, of every review or pamphlet dealing with any aspect of Canadian life or history is in our collection," said Mr. Fauteux, motioning to the steel stack, three tiers high, containing this section of the library. "Thirty thousand titles are comprised under this one heading alone.

"Then, too, this library has the largest collection of old books printed in Canada in the years from 1763 to 1820—larger even than that at Quebec. Mr. N. E. Dionne, who was for many years the chief librarian of the Quebec Legislature, has listed 300 of such books in both English and French. We have 700 of these early first editions of Canadian printers in our collection."

Mr. Fauteux pointed out a complete set of the original "Relations" of the Jesuit Fathers, covering the period from 1632 to 1673, a compilation dealing with the founding of the Order of the Society of Jesus in New France, but containing also a minute and faithful description of the life, manners and customs of the country during those years. These volumes were printed in Paris, by permission of the King of France, at the sign of the Swan in the rue St. Jacques by Sebastien Cramoisy, Printer to The King. They are bound in vellum, now somewhat stained and discolored in places, delicately tooled in gold, but after nearly three centuries the paper and print are perfect.

RARE VOLUMES.

Other rare books dealing with the founding and early history of Canada are the semi-historical, semi-biographical works of Champlain, Sagard and Lescarbot, men whose names have since become legendary. Christian Le Clerq, a Recollect monk of Ville Marie, published two or three works dealing with the establishment of the faith in this country, and one of these volumes is so rare that a copy sold in the United States a short time back for $900, according to Mr. Fauteux, who explained that this particular volume had never been reprinted, and is consequently extremely scarce and eagerly sought by American collectors.

Among other rare and valuable books possessed by the library, Mr. Fauteux showed a beautifully bound and illustrated volume of St. Thomas Aquinas' Commentary on the Gospels printed in 1475, just 25 years after the invention of the printing press. The initial letter of every commentary contains the portrait of some ecclesiastic or famous personage of the time, penned by some unknown monk artist in gorgeous purples, reds and golds, that still retain all their original softness. Another precious book owned by the library is a Commentary on Peter Lombard by John of Cologne, printed in 1469, which has no pagination or register. A register, Mr. Fauteux explained, is a kind of index giving the last word of every fifth or tenth or fifteenth page, as the case may be, instead of the more modern method of numbering each page. With this index, it was stated, it is always possible to detect if a page is missing.

Many books of this early period were bound in leather covered boards, and Mr. Fauteux drew out a beautiful volume bearing the year date 1480, and showed the ravages of that small boring insect called the bookworm, which had dug holes all over the wooden covers.

An exceedingly valuable work possessed by the library is the Vitre Bible, which is contained in ten folio volumes, each about a foot and a half high, and written in four languages—Syriac, Hebrew, Latin and French. Copies of this work are rare, Mr. Fauteux said, because the original type was thrown away.

ORIGINAL EDITIONS.

"But I could continue for hours telling you of the beautiful and remarkable books belonging to the Library of St. Sulpice," said Mr. Fauteux. "Look, here are the Relations of Thevenot, in which he gives details and descriptions of the voyages of Father Merquette. It once belonged to the famous de Thou library in France, and bears the de Thou coat of arms on the cover. These are two original editions of Champlain's Voyages, with the original map of New France. All these books are hunted by book lovers the world over, and any one would delight the heart of a connoisseur if he could but own it. This edition of Hakluyt's Voyages and Principles of Navigation is remarkable on account of its completeness. Here is Creuxius Historia Canadensis, written by one of the early Jesuit Fathers in Latin. Here is a complete set of the Mercure Francois, published in Paris from 1605 to 1638, which gives an intimate picture of the time of Louis the Thirteenth.

"This book by Nicholas Denys, the first governor of Acadia, contains a description of the coast of North America. There are perhaps not more than five known volumes complete with maps and plates, and this is one of them."

Altogether, the Library of St. Sulpice has a collection of between 115,000 to 120,000 volumes on its shelves, Mr. Fauteux stated.

Magazines Then and Now

By Aubrey Fullerton

THIS is the 185th year since the establishment of the first magazine in North America, and the 195th year since Number One of the first magazine in the English language. Within two centuries, that is to say, a new medium of current literature has arisen and developed, waxed and waned, and in its various forms has become a factor in the lives of most thinking and many unthinking people.

In Canada the first magazine appeared in 1789. Its birthplace was Halifax, which thirty-seven years earlier had also produced Canada's first newspaper. The Nova Scotia Magazine, forerunner of all Canadian monthlies, lived three years.

Four other magazine ventures were launched in Halifax during the first half of the new century, but none of them were of long endurance. They had both courage and merit, but the times were not ripe.

The Quebec Magazine, which began in 1791, was the first in Canada in the French language.

Eight different publications, at different times have taken the name of The Canadian Magazine. The first of these was in Montreal in 1823, and the others came from Toronto, beginning in 1833. The present bearer of the title dates from 1893.

Today there are in Canada about one hundred quarterly, monthly, and fortnightly magazines, including the reviews, the literary, fiction and domestic periodicals, and the largest of the business, educational, outdoor life, agricultural, and brotherhood or society monthlies. Many others have been born and have died, for the way of the magazine publisher in a country of such great distances and sparse population, has never been an easy one. Moreover, American magazines have competed in the same field.

Despite a heavy death rate in the United States also, there are now being issued in that country about 2,500 publications of magazine grade. Changes in the list are frequent. Magazines come and go, and there are not many that have been publishing for more than fifty years. Both as to numbers and kind it is a far cry from the day of beginnings.

In 1741, when the first magazine in America made its appearance, there were not more than fourteen or fifteen newspapers this side of the Atlantic, and to attempt anything more in the way of a publishing enterprise, was a courageous undertaking. Even England had been given its first magazine only ten years before, when Cave, a London bookseller, launched The Gentleman's Magazine, which was described as a "monthly collection, to treasure up as in a magazine" articles on the subjects with which it was proposed to deal. That was how and when the term was applied: and the idea itself took so well that it spread to the colonies.

Benjamin Franklin, pioneer journalist and man of affairs, was at that time prosperously established as a printer in Philadelphia. He had opened a shop of his own in 1727 and two years later had acquired a newspaper that a rival printer had been publishing unsuccessfully. Under his control The Pennsylvania Gazette became both popular and influential.

Twelve years of newspaper ownership brought the eighteenth century Munsey to the point where he saw an opportunity for a monthly magazine, which, he thought, would serve to shape public opinion more leisurely and therefore more effectively than a weekly news-sheet. He decided to make the venture and began to prepare for it. Before he was fully ready, however, his plans leaked out, and another printer, Bradford, stole a march on him by arranging for the publication of a magazine from his own office. As a matter of fact, this rival magazine was out first, preceeding Franklin's by a narrow margin of three days. But it ran for only three issues, and the real credit for founding magazine journalism in America therefore belongs to Franklin, for not only did he first think of it, but he stayed longer at it.

Franklin's new publication was The General Magazine and Historical Chronicle. Its rival was The American, or a Monthly View. Both were known by their shorter names, and in the meagre constituency of their time they appealed to the same class of readers.

In its contents The General Magazine was heavy and over-solid. Of matter even approaching the popular type of modern magazine literature there was almost none. Out of twenty-three articles in one number, ten dealt with parliamentary proceedings in the colony and in London, and the others were devoted to religion, philosophy, and purposeful information. Whatever the hand of Benjamin Franklin touched was well done, but it was inevitable that he should view his work as a moulder of public opinion very seriously. The day of light literature had not arrived.

For six months Franklin continued to put out his magazine, hoping, no doubt, that it might yet make a place for itself. Then he dropped it. Whether the public of "all the British plantations in America" did not respond sufficiently to its appeal or whether it was too heavy a load to carry with his numerous other duties and undertakings, we do not know, for he makes no mention of it in his autobiography.
